

Dear reader:

Bob LeFevre changed many lives. He certainly changed mine. I met him on March 17, 1943. I was working toward a singing career. In a single instant I knew he was the man I would marry.

There never was a dull moment in 42 years of marriage. On that fateful morning of May 13, 1986, I discovered he had died in his sleep. To quote a song I used, as a closing number when I sang for the students at the Freedom School, "Softly I will leave you; Softly, for my heart would break if you so should wake and see me go."

The success of Bob's life work The Fundamentals of Liberty can be the greatest monument to a man who sought truth and freedom all his life.

I hope this book will bring many people to a new outlook for the future.

Yours in Freedom,

Lois (Loy) LeFevre

Don't forget that LeFevre's book makes a great gift for the Holiday Season. Order several copies.
